JEFF HALPER

Jeff Halper's experience as a professor of Anthropology convinced him early on of the importance of trust in human relationships and the need never to treat humans as the "other". An American who moved to Israel in 1973 after attending rabbinical school and becoming a Vietnam War resister, Halper refused to bear arms, even during his Israeli military service, and refused to serve in the Occupied Territories. Two of his children have been imprisoned as conscientious objectors.

Halper co-founded the Israeli Committee Against House Demolition (ICAHD) in 1997, which was among the first Israeli peace groups to work inside the Occupied Palestinian Territories. ICAHD has worked in coalition with Israeli and Palestinian organizations to resist the demolition of Palestinian homes by sitting in front of bulldozers and confronting Israeli soldiers. He and ICAHD also organize Palestinians, Israelis and internationals to rebuild demolished homes as acts of political resistance to the Occupation, thereby exposing the injustice of the Occupation and asserting the importance of international civil society in bringing about change.

ICAHD is distinguished by its appeal to the international community, disseminating information, networking and analyzing what Halper calls the 'matrix of control' employed by Israel in its occupation of the West Bank and Gaza -- the framework created by strategic settlements, settler-only highways and the Separation Wall. ICAHD seeks to go beyond dialogue and challenging stereotypes to assert that true reconciliation requires the restoration of justice -- a justice to be brought about through nonviolent direct action and adherence to human rights.

Jeff Halper has in recent years spent a great deal of time traveling abroad to counter mainstream media information about the "realities on the ground," and will be visiting Madison in support of a massive home rebuilding campaign being undertaken by the newly-founded ICAHD-USA.
